Of the Founding of the Order of the Christian Brothers-Solemn High Mass at St. Peter's Church-Grand Reunion at the College Hall Last

resterday the feast of St. John, the Bap-tist, was a great day among the Caristian Brothers, by reason of its being the two hun-dredth anniversay of the founding of the order. The Christian Brothers had invited all their friends to unite with them in as-sisting at a solemn high mass of thanks-giving at St. Peter's church, and it must have been a source of the greatest pleasure to find the church crowed to its full capacity. The the church crowed to its full capacity. The anctuary was most beautifully decorated. The altars were covered with a profusion of flowers, most artistically arranged. On the right side of the main altar was a pillar beautifully decorated and bearing these words of the paalmist, "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." The ladies of the altar society displayed the mest exquisite and refined taste in all their arrangements. The ceremonies were very solemn and imposing, and the decorations and excellent singing and music contributed to make them doubly impressive. Rev. Father O'Dwyer, O. P., was celebrant; Rev. Father Wm. Walsh, pustor St. Bridget's, deacon, and Rev. Father M'Shane, O. P., sub-deacon. In the sanctuary as assistants were Rev. Father Aloysus, O. S. F., pastor of St. Mary's church, Rev. A. Luiselli, pastor of St. Joseph's church, and Rev. F. Martin, O. S. F. The music and singing were the best ever heard in St. Peter's church. The choir and orchestra had not only the talent and artistic skill, but they entered fully into the spirit of the great composer, and thereby rendered the mass with that degree of splendor for which the compositions of Mozart are so remarkable. Without detracting in the least from the merits of the members of the choir, we must say that much of the sporcess was we must say that much of the success was due to the leadership and the indomitable energy of Professor C. The order of the Christian Brothers was The order of the Christian Brothers was founded by the venerable Jean Baptiste de LaSalle. This remarkable man was born at Rheims, France, April 30, 1651. He was descended from one of the most ancient and most noble families of France, and a near relative of the great explorers of the Mississippi valley, LaSalle and the great Father Marquette. Although Jean Baptiste de LaSalle had every avenue open for him that could make him enjoy the honors and pleesures of this life, still, he, at the early age of ures of this life, still, he, at the early age of seventeen, renounced the honors, pleasures and all future prospects of the world to de-vote himself to the service of God. In due time he was ordained priest, received the degree of doctor of divinity, and devoted himself with all the energy of his soul for the good of his neighbor. The great object of his life was to provide for the education of youth, and he spared no effort to carry out this, his darling scheme. In carrying out this purpose he began by providing for the christian education of all those grades, which were at that time neglected in France. On the twenty-fourth of June, 1680, just two huadred years ago, he formally organized the society known as the Christian Brothers. The founder personally thught school at Rheims, Marseilles, Paris and Grenoble, and died a most consoling death on Good Friday, April 7, 1719, after having had the consolation of At the time of the founding of the order the individual method of instruction was the only one in use, and it is to the founder of the Christian Brothers the world owes the amultaneous as well as the mutual-simultaneous method of instruction—a fact which is known by very few outside of the order. The Christian Brothers' schools exist in every part of the world, and include colleges, academies, normal schools, military schools, parish schools, protectorates, orphan asylums and industrial schools. The reunion at the college was very interesting, as the Christian Brothers met some of their pupils whom they had not seen for years. Addresses were made by the president of the college, by Dr. E. M. with leading Democrats in the city and dis-satches from all parts of the Pacific coast dicate that the nomination of Hancock, alugh unexpected, is regarded as the bes solution of the question of harmonizing con-flicting interests. Thurman would have been more popular in California, and many express disappointment that Tilden was not nomil, white some ultra southern Democrat bject to Hancock, mainly on account of hi connection with the Surratt business; but or the whole, the nomination gives great satisfaction. The Republicans are disposed to admit that the ticket is a strong one. The Examiner indorses it without reserve, and rophesies his election. The Bulletin considers it the strongest nomination the Demo-cra's could have made. The Post claims that the Democrats have blundered, and have virtually abandoned the cry of fraud and in-dersed the action of the electoral commission.

David Ker in Good Company: "Yes, they had a hard time of it there," says a short, sallow, keen-eyed man, glancing over the illustrated newspaper which contains an engraving of Mr. Augustus Van Cleet's fine monument to the "unknown dead" at Salisbury, North Carolina. "I guess I ought to know something of what the southern prisons were like during the war, for I had five months of it in Andersoaville myself."

In a Pennsylvania train, among men of whom not a few have taken part in the great struggle themselves, and who have each and all had at lesst one relative engaged in it, such an announcement is quite sufficient to ommand general attention. "No! did you, though?" "S'pose you tell us the story, mister; there's time enough 'fore New York, I reckon."
"All right, if you care to hear it. You see, when I first came over from England the war was just about beginning, and as there didn't seem to be anything for me to do, I thought I'd better soldier than starve, so I went and 'tisted right away. I was long in finding out that soldiering and starving might sometimes mean pretty much the same thing, for rations were pretty scarce with us once or twice, when we got down on the Mississippi. I tell ye, after lying all night in a rice swamp, still and wet and miserable, with nothing to eat and only marsh water to drink, it was just like the breath of life to me to hear the alarm sounded, and know that we'd be at the enemy in a few minutes more. At this moment a pale-faced man, who was going from seat to seat with a basket of newspapers and magazines, paused for a moment to listen, with a look of such evident apprecition that it hardly required the testimony his empty sleeve to show that he, too, had been a soldier in his time.

"We had plenty of fighting down there," pursued the narrator, as the newspaper man passed on; "but most of it was just the sort that I didn't like—skirmishing among thick woods, where all you could see of your enemy was the smoke of his piece as he let fly at you, where lots of our fellows were shot down without ever knowing who hurt 'em. I'd a pretty narrow escape myself that way one night. I was standing sentry at the outposts when a reb let slap at me from the thicket, and just caught me across the cheek here; you see the mark. I got behind a tree quick as winking, and there I stuffed my jacket with grass, and put it up against a tree with a stick through it and my cap on the top, to look as it I was peering around for a shot; and then I dropped down and crawled away into the bushes. Presently I heard the crack of the reb's piece again, and, looking out, I just caught sight of his arm an houlder, and brought him down with one "Well, not long after that, I and some more got picked up by the southern cavalry, and it wasn't a great while before we found ourselves all bard and fast in Andersonville, and there we did have a time sure enough.

"The place has been described so elten that I dare say you have a pretty good idea what t was like. It was a great, wide, swampy field, with a stockade around it, inside of he could rig up a shelter against the sun ard rain, all the better for him; if he hadn't he just took his chance; and I can tell you there were mighty few blankets among us,

"All day long the ann kept roasting us alive, and at night the damp and chill ate into our very bones, and set us shivering till our teeth rattled again. As to food, many's the time I've gone all day upon a couple of biscuits, and small ones at that; and as to water, all we had was from a stream that ran through a cypress swamp, and you may think through a cypress swamp, and you may think what kind of stuff that was." what kind of stuff that was."

"You must have been powerful hungry, I reckon," remarked a sympathetic listener.

"Hungry?" Well, I'll just tell you something about that. One day a young tellow, the son of the general who had us in charge, came into the pen to look around, with his little poodle dog following him. He hardly turved his back, when that dog was chopped up and eaten bodily; and when his master came back to look for him there was nothing left but a bit of skin about so big. They

"Well, one night late in the fall I'd got as alleases I could to the dead line, so that the well, one night late in the lail I d got as close as I could to the dead line, so that the stockade might shelter me a bit from the cold wind. (Ugh! how it did bite through me that night.) I was just wondering if I could live through till morning, and hardly caring whether I did or not, when a sentry just outside gave a 'P'at!' that made me

"Say, Yank,' he whispered, 'I guess you'll want a blanket to-night. Catch hold of this.' And he rolled up his own and chucked it to entirely unprepared for. To a member of the press who had called to see the general on a matter connected with the recent military examination, he said: 'Had you called an hour since I might have given you the information desired. The position I am placed in at present debars me from making any statement relative to the subject.' The general shock hands with many of his friends, who came crowding into "And did you never hear no more 'o that feller as giv'yer the blanket?" asked one of the audience with undisguised interest.

At that moment a sharp voice said close to The soldier started as if he had been shot, and turning hastily found himself confronted by the thin face of the one-armed newspaper man, it with a knowing smile.

"Why, if here ain't the very man himself!" shouted the narrator, seizing him with both hands. "Well, who'd ever thought it? You're just going along to New York with me, old chap, and you don't ever go back to peddling papers while I'm about."

And the ex-prisoner was as good as his DRY GOODS.
